

March 24, 2020

Chairman Ajit Pai
Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20054

Dear Chairman Pai:

The undersigned 7,664 education leaders and others from across the country urge you to make E-rate funds available for us to equip students with home internet access so they can continue learning as classes move online while schools are closed nationwide due to coronavirus.

We have long known that the Homework Gap unfairly hinders the ability of students living in rural areas, students of color, and students from low-income families to fully benefit from many of the educational opportunities made available by modern technology. According to data from the National Center for Education Statistics, 14 percent of children had no internet access at home in 2017, with major equity gaps—12 percent of White students had no internet access at home, compared to nearly 20 percent of Black and Latino students and 37 percent of Native students. While these figures have always been alarming, it has never been more important to address this inequity than it is right now.

The Telecommunications Act calls upon the Federal Communications Commission to enhance the ability of libraries and elementary and secondary school classrooms to access advanced telecommunications services. As you are aware, many of our classrooms across the country are now being placed online due to school closures, but many of our students are unable to benefit from online learning because they lack the needed home internet access. We urge you to take immediate and aggressive action so we can keep classrooms open online as long as school buildings must be closed.

At this unprecedented time in our nation's history, the FCC has the opportunity to make a dramatic impact on educational equity for millions of students. The coronavirus is impacting nearly every facet of American life. With your partnership, we can mitigate this disruption by continuing to provide the nation's students the education they need and deserve.

Sincerely,
(see attached)
